SITUATION IN HAWAII.

A Brief Abstract of Rev. Walter Frear's Address Before the Club.

Mr. Frear, in introducing the subject, expressed his own fond hope that if any of the members of the Club should ever be permitted to visit those delightful islands it would be under the stars and stripes—the best flag that ever floated, and the only one that should henceforth float over Hawaii.

In a brief historical sketch, he showed that the men who Christianized and civilized the islands were the true builders of the nation. They, with their noble, legal coadjutors and advisers, framed the Constitution, organized the school system, and established the Judiciary. From the start the government has been mainly administered by Anglo-Saxons.

The kingly Kamehamehas always appointed to Cabinet and Bench men of sterling ability and character, thus giving stability and security to all the great interests of society. But Kamehameha came under other influences. He surrounded himself with sycophants and flatterers. Race prejudices were cultivated among the natives.

Bad personal rule was more and more attempted until good government was despaired of. The uprising of 1857 was simply the act of erecting better safeguards in the interest of good government. Repeatedly the king attempted to break down those safeguards; and when the late queen came to the throne she continued in the same course until the final tragedy came. Under bad advice, her bold attempt was to abrogate the Constitution that she had sworn to support, and give one in which her capricious will should decide Cabinet, and nobles, and court. The treason was hers. She was the revolutionist.

The aroused citizens dethroned her to save the Constitution; to save, in fact, life, liberty and property. The uprising in our own country when Sumner was fired upon was not more justifiable. It was justifiable in the interests of the natives, as well as of the whites. In fact, those who have been prominent in this movement have ever been the best friends of the natives—guarding their rights and spending for their welfare.

The civilization there is by no means an indigenous development. The great property interests, the merchandising, the commerce, the trades, the agriculture, the professions, the judiciary, belong to those who uphold the Provisional Government, and who now offer the islands to our country.

There is no going back to royalty. There is no reviving power in the royalty itself. Only a foreign force can reverse the present movement. And yet the present position is not a permanent one. The better classes now generally unite in the desire for annexation. If this is refused, then discord will again enter. Intrigues will begin. Uncertainties will prevail. Questions too great for settlement, as between different classes and nationalities, will arise if the one great bond of union that now happily binds them is broken and spurned.

No one who knows the situation could advocate a protectorate. The civilization there is of too high an order for that kind of a thing. There are too many great English and German interests there for that kind of by-play. The Englishman and German and American, whether island or foreign born, would welcome annexation, but would fear and well might spurn a protectorate. Those islands are not a Samoa, or a Gilbert, or a Caroline group. We might as well speak of a protectorate for a city like San Francisco, or Oakland, or Los Angeles, or Portland, as for Honolulu. It is a plain yes or no on the subject of annexation in one form or another that is asked of our country now.

There is no argument that can be used against annexation that would not have been used against California when it was received as a Territory. It was more remote and inaccessible than the islands now are. It was occupied mostly by Mexicans and Indians, with very few Americans. Take, for instance, Southern California, with its beautiful cities, its fairland of the orange and the vine. Did we make a mistake in receiving it? And yet we could fence it off with a Chinese wall and remand it back to Mexico; and in doing it we would not lose as much as the future will prove that we would lose if we do not now take the islands.

The greatness of this coast is largely in its orchards and vineyards and wheat fields and mines of its valleys and hills, but its great greatness is yet to be in the commerce of the Pacific; and the islands are the hub of all the spokes of that commerce. They are in just the right position for us, and I hesitate not to say that they are worth to us ten times as much as they would be if attached to our shore. Instead of being an expense to us, they will pay for themselves many times over. They have been enriching our State for years, and would increasingly enrich it if annexed.—The Pacific.

IN THE COUNCIL.

MONDAY, March 13.

The Council met at 2 P. M. Minutes read and approved. W. F. Allen reported on the ownership of things at the Palace.

The report of the Military Commander was presented. It recommends the number of the regulars be increased to 103, eighteen more than at present. It had been limited because the barracks were full. Referred to the Executive.

The sum of $350 was appropriated to provide further accommodations for the band, battery company and drill shed.

The Attorney-General presented a resolution that no expenditure of money should be incurred without the approval of the Executive and Advisory Councils and the approval of the officer in whose department it falls. He thought that this matter had been fully understood before, but there had been apparently some misunderstanding.

The report of the Committee on the Insane Asylum was taken up. It finds that the Insane Asylum is well managed, but recommends transfer to the control of the Board of Health. Attorney-General Smith moved the Judiciary Committee draft a bill for that purpose. Carried.

The New York Tribune points out that a protectorate over Hawaii is more difficult and perplexing than annexation. That is true. To determine to what extent protection should go, what shall be its form, and what its relation to foreign powers, involves grave difficulty. But under annexation the people of Hawaii simply propose to become self-governing according to the American system; to substitute republican for monarchical methods; to become sovereigns instead of remaining subjects. The Bureau of Information was not in it when it came to advertising the islands; it was lacking in the essential qualifications to get up a boom, besides the expense was an item for the consideration of the stockholders. Hawaii is getting a bit of advertising now that could not be influenced by any organized body for that purpose or be bought with coin. We're getting it editorially too—the best kind of an "ad" and have you noticed that Poi and TARO FLOUR are being praised in song and story. Somehow TARO FLOUR is getting there—and so it should.
